

PPL Corporation chairman says company remains well-positioned for future growth, success

ALLENTOWN, Pa., May 16, 2018 /PRNewswire/ -- PPL Corporation (NYSE: PPL) is focused on delivering best-in-sector operational performance, investing responsibly in a sustainable energy future, maintaining a strong financial foundation, and engaging and developing its people, PPL Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer William H. Spence announced today at PPL's annual meeting in Allentown, Pa.

In his address to shareowners, Spence highlighted the company's progress in pursuit of this strategy in 2017, discussed the company's stock price performance, reaffirmed PPL's commitment to sustainable growth, and praised the company's 12,000 employees for their dedication to customers, shareowners and their local communities.

"By many measures, your company excelled in 2017," Spence said. "We delivered power safely and reliably to more than 10 million customers in the U.S. and the U.K. We achieved the high end of our earnings forecast range and increased our dividend by 4 percent. We invested about $3.5 billion in infrastructure to modernize the grid and advance a cleaner energy future. And we remained focused on continuous improvement and value for our customers."

In Pennsylvania, PPL Electric Utilities recorded its best year ever for safety and reliability, Spence said. At the same time, Louisville Gas and Electric Company and Kentucky Utilities Company produced their best year in more than a decade for reliability — cutting the frequency of outages by more than a third since 2010.

Across the regions they serve, PPL's businesses continued to lead the way in customer satisfaction. PPL Electric Utilities and Kentucky Utilities ranked highest in residential customer satisfaction among similarly sized utilities in their respective regions, and PPL's four U.K. utilities again ranked as the country's top four distribution network operators in customer satisfaction.

While PPL demonstrated strong operational performance, Spence said political and regulatory uncertainty in the U.K. weighed on the price of PPL shares. Uncertainty over the potential negative impacts of tax reform also affected the utility sector in 2017.

However, Spence said the company remains confident that its Western Power Distribution business in the U.K. remains well-positioned for success as the top-performing network operator group in the country. In addition, he pointed to a recent decision by U.K. regulator Ofgem as a signal of support for the country's regulatory framework. In that decision, Ofgem announced on April 30 that it would forgo a mid-period review of network operator revenues and output requirements under the country's current eight-year price control period, which extends until March of 2023.

"As U.K. uncertainty fades, we believe PPL's stock price will better reflect our proven track record of execution, our high-performing utilities and our strong organic growth story," Spence said. "Looking forward, we are well-positioned to deliver competitive earnings growth and dividends."

Wednesday's meeting was held at PPL Center in Allentown. During the meeting, PPL shareowners elected 10 directors to one-year terms, approved 2017 compensation for executive officers named in the company's proxy statement, and ratified the appointment of Deloitte & Touche LLP as the company's independent registered public accounting firm for 2018.
